

ARROYO

MONTHLY

Sally Pfeiffer, the book's production designer, and the peripatetic Sally Miller.

Hover over the thumbnails to view the larger image

Prospect Park Books publisher Colleen Dunn Bates threw a coming-out party on Nov. 15 for the Pasadena imprint's latest offering, "At Home: Pasadena," a hardcover coffee-table book about the homes and gardens of the Pasadena area. About 175 people gathered at the Altadena home of Paul and Julie Thomson to toast its creators:

local authors Jill Ganon and Sandy Gillis, as well as Art Center alums Jennifer Cheung and Steven Nilsson, who photographed the book, and James Barkley, who designed it. Profits from the evening's sale of books and photographs benefited two local nonprofits: Arlington Garden, a Mediterranean public garden featured in "At Home: Pasadena," and the Pasadena Art Alliance (board member Annaly Bennett appears in the book as well).